Due to the volume of records that are processed by credit bureaus every day, the National Credit Regulator and its registrants (credit bureaus, credit providers and other data suppliers) have agreed on a layout and timeframes for the submission of repayment information. This means that credit providers, other data suppliers and credit bureaus have automated processes in place for the submission and acceptance of monthly, daily or weekly (depending on the agreed billing cycle) payment information. The process can take up to 60 days while the credit provider receives, clears and allocates the payment to the correct account and from there reported as paid to the credit bureaus via the data transmission hub.

Credit bureaus will therefore log an information challenge for an account that has been settled where the process has failed, and the data has not been updated 59 days or more.

Please complete this form for each account that is being disputed.
